

I object strongly to Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election.

This type of corporate campaigning--and deceptive, misleading campaigning at that--is completely against the public interest.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. I expect the FCC to do more than sit by while the federal law is violated. I insist that you intervene and either 1) stop the airing of the wildly inaccurate "Stolen Honor," or 2) require Sinclair to offer some equivalent programming on the other side of the question, such as "Going Upriver" or "Fahrenheit 911."

The FCC should enforce the rules we have. And, it should work to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them.

The license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
